"If I were thinking of marriage," I my own judgment of the girl of my so many girls of her own age. choice. I would discover if she stood well with members of her own sex."

"If I were thinking of marriage," replied Edith, "I would go to the mother of the man I thought of marrying and ask her if she could recommend him."

speaking troutcally or not. I dropped the subject.

I had gone to Florida, where Edith twas spending the winter, to ask her to be my wife. Since we did not reside in the same place when at home I had had no opportunity of knowing how she stood with any one except tayself. Therefore before making her aware of my intentions I resolved to povertly draw forth the opinions of certain members of her own sex. There were a number of girls at the same botel with her, and I thought I after a couple of days' stay among them it seemed to me that Edith elther kept berself voluntarily aloof from them or had been left out of their little coterie. I soon became good friends with them and proceeded to e'ucidate the matter. What was my surprise to discover that not one of them would speak well of her, and many of them spoke ill of her.

This was a shock. I had supposed that good opinions of one who seemed to me to be so deserving of them would come merely for the asking. But no, If I were to sum up her character upon the evidence of those who must know her, rather than marry her it would be better for me that I had never been born. One declared that she was vain, another selfish, another untruthful. Indeed, every one attributed to her some fault. Not willing to condemn ber without a hearing, I asked her why she did not make companions of the other young ladies in the hotel.

"Oh," she replied disdainfully, "they've got up a mutual admiration society and have no use for any girl except themselves." The reply was not satisfactory. I was bitterly disappointed. The only thing for me to do was to go back north and drop Edith from my mind. But she was attractive to me-very attractive. She was pretty and engaging. I didn't wish to give her up. I made up my mind, however, to be true to the principle 1 had enunciated to Edith herself at the beginning of this story. I packed my trunk and paid my bill at the notel. Then I did what men | man for an opinion of me?" are constantly doing when they apply principles to their love affairs. I sub-

Her own testimony in her own behalf would on principles of evidence be worthless. Nevertheless, on the evening before my departure I walked with her into an orange grove and asked said to Edith. I called her attention to the fact that all these young ladies were her peers and their concurrence in condemning her was not to be put aside by her bare assertion. She replied that if our acqualitance were to continue it must be upon the condition she had stated,

We walked back to the hotel in silence, and at parting Edith didn't even look at me. I went to my room and wrestled with myself. That night I slept but tittle and the next morning awoke with a languid feeling, not only might gather evidence from them. But | of body, but of mind. All day I straggled to prevent myself from marrying a girl condemned by her associates. I went to the railroad station, but saw the train leave without me. Edith when I met her on the tennis court took no notice of me. She seemed to have forgotten me over the net. In the afternoon when she appeared, beautifully appareled and with a rose in her hair, I raised the white fing. 1 asked her to walk with me in the orange grove. Once there I told her that if all the saints in heaven condemned her I would feel bonored to kiss the hem of her garment. "You told me," she replied, "that if you meditated marriage you would discover if the girl of your choice stood well with her own sex. You know what the girls here think of me." "They are unworthy to express an opinion of you." She laughed.

"I admit." I stammered, "that I have gone back on my principle. Perhaps

I have been a fool, but I can't help it." "Yes, you have been very stupid, In the first place, I knew what you you should not have told me that you were going to ask my friends their spinion of me."

"Your friends!" "Yes. All these girls are my friends. I told them if you asked their opinion of me to condemn me.' "What in the name of conscience
